

Age Reversing Dermatology Reports Continued Success With LipoDissolve Ultra: A New Treatment That “Melts Fat Without Surgery”

LipoDissolve is a minimally invasive medical procedure that breaks down fat cells in specific areas of the body. Small amounts of sodium deoxycholate, a natural product found in bile salts, and lecithin, a derivative of soy products, are injected into unwanted areas of fat, such as the tummy, love handles, double chins and saddle bags. The fat cells then break open and the body’s natural cleansing system metabolizes and eliminates the waste products out of the patient’s system. The technique has become increasingly popular in the United States and Canada over the past few years.

LipoDissolve, also known as liposculpture, is a specific type of treatment known generally as ‘Mesotherapy’ that was first developed in France in the 1950’s and given formal recognition by the French Academy of Medicine in 1987. Presently, over 20,000 medical practitioners provide LipoDissolve/Mesotherapy throughout Europe, Great Britain, and North and South America.

“It is very popular because we don’t have to use surgery,” comments Barry A.S. Lycka, associate clinical professor of dermatology at the University of Alberta.. “There are many formulations and cocktails that have been injected during the evolution of the Mesotherapy/LipoDissolve process and many of these formulas are not safe. It’s important for anyone considering this procedure to consult a qualified, trained, medical doctor to do this treatment. Combined with ultrasound and endermologie the results have been amazing.”

Patients love LipoDissolve because it is not as costly as liposuction surgery and it fits more naturally with one’s lifestyle. LipoDissolve can be used in conjunction with liposuction for better body contouring. It can also be a good way of 'touching up' unevenly treated areas after patients have liposuction.
